

05/16/12 - Bulemas With Rainbow Swiss Chard

Inspiring produce abounds at the Santa Monica Farmers Market every Wednesday. If you arrive early enough there is a chance of shooting some great pictures before the later crowds block the stalls from a clear view. Some very fine and limited quantity items sell out in the first few moments after the market opens, usually to some chef from a very good restaurant. One week I arrived a few moments too late to purchase some miniature purple cauliflowers that would have looked spectacular on plates for individuals. Last week and I assume going forward Rainbow chard seems in abundant supply. Rainbow chard is aptly named Swiss chard but with a rainbow of different colored stems, including, fuchsia, red, orange, yellow, purple and white variegated. I had to buy some since the intensity of colors was so

Now what to do with all of that lovely Swiss chard? How about chopping it up, mixing it with cheese and baking inside Bulemas? Sounds yummy.

I have a question for you my readers. What actually makes a recipe or dish Sephardic? Is it a style of cooking? Does it mean only dishes I ate as a child that my Nona brought from Turkey? Can it include dishes that I cook and bake, being Sephardic, which keep to a certain way of presenting or stuffing, or cooking method, or spices, or flavoring? What is Sephardic food going forward? Does Sephardic food include dishes that were brought here to the United States and have gone through generations of adaptation through using local produce and ingredients?

Does it include Israeli dishes and does it include the cuisine that can be made kosher from countries like Morocco, Egypt, Turkey and other countries that ring the Mediterranean? I would be interested to hear your opinions.

Serves 14 to 16

Dough:

1 and 1/2 teaspoon active dry yeast

1 tablespoon sugar

1 teaspoon sea salt

1 tablespoon olive oil

6 cups better for bread flour

1/2 cup extra virgin olive oil

Flour for dusting

Filling:

1 bunch rainbow Swiss chard, washed and dried

8 ounces mild feta cheese (Bulgarian style from Israel)

4 ounces sharp cheddar

1 cup finely grated Parmesano Reggiano

1/3 cup grated Kasserri Cheese

Topping:

1/3 cup finely grated Parmesano Reggiano

In a two cup glass measure, combine yeast, sugar, salt, oil. Add 2 cups of warm water and stir. Place flour in a large mixing bowl or bowl of a food processor. After the yeast and water mixture begins to foam (about 8 to 10 minutes), add the yeast water to the flour and process for 60 seconds. If mixing by hand mix and then

Dust a rimmed baking sheet with flour. Divide dough into 4 round balls, flatten them into discs and set them in the baking sheet. Spray a piece of plastic wrap with oil or non stick baking spray and loosely cover baking sheet. Place a tea towel on top of

While the dough is rising prepare filling and line two rimmed baking with silpats or parchment paper. Pour 1/4 cup of remaining olive oil in a third baking sheet. To make filling place dry chard leaves in a stack on cutting board. Slice into thin ribbons with a sharp knife. Slice the opposite direction to finish dicing the chard and place in a large bowl. Crumble feta cheese; add cheddar, Parmesano, and kasseri.

When dough has risen for about two hours, punch it down and divide each ball into 3 to 4 pieces each. Roll each piece to make a flattened ball and set balls in rimmed baking sheet with oil. Cover dough with a tea towel and let dough rise a second time only for one hour.

Heat oven to 400 °F. Working on a wood or stone work surface, gently stretch each ball of dough first into a flat oval and after 5 minutes stretch it out to a rectangle about 10 inches by 7 inches. Dunk your hands in the remaining 1/4 cup oil to facilitate the stretching. I stretch about 5 at a time, let them rest and then go ahead a stretch them all the way out. Take a scant handful of filling or about 1/3 to 1/2 cup and spread it in a narrow line along the long side of the dough about 2 to 3 inches from the edge. Roll up bulema into a long cylinder and coil into a circle like a cinnamon roll. Place on silpat lined baking sheet. Sprinkle with remaining Parmesano.

Bake Bulemas for about 20 minutes or until crisp and golden all the way around. Remove from oven and place on a cooling rack so bottoms stay crisp. Eat them like this, or reheated. You can freeze and reheat them in a 300°F oven for about 10 minutes. Bulemas are great for Shabbat Lunch, Shavuot, and brunches like
